Grammar: People vs. Persons

Modern Usage: Generally 'person' is used for the singular. 'People' is used for the plural.

1 person, 100 people

Technical Usage: Technical, legal and formal English uses an older definition. This helps it emphasise the responsibilities of individuals, even when they are in a group.

'People' = the population/group as a whole

'Person' = an individual

'Persons' = more than one individual

Saying 'persons' means that, although acting with others, the decisions, responsibilities and legal consequences are treated independently (not as a group).

'The persons involved will be prosecuted' - each individual will be prosecuted (not prosecute the group as a whole)

'No more than 10 persons allowed' - Although the individuals are independent (they may not know each other), no more than 10 are allowed

Dialogue: Interview (conclusion)

Interviewer: And what interested you in this particular business?

Emili: Firstly, the company name is quite enticing: everybody knows it. On top of this, I know that the quality of the training here is top notch, meaning – if I were lucky enough to be employed here – my own skills would improve. But mostly, I believe in the philosophy and ideals you have here.

Interviewer: Interesting. So what do you think you could bring to our little project?

Emili: I think I have the expertise you are looking for, and am really interested in the areas in which you are working. I think my knowledge and enthusiasm will be my biggest assets. Of course, I know you already have some supremely talented people on board here, so I'd have to work hard.

Interviewer: Alright. I think I have a good idea of what you're about. Are there any questions you'd like to ask?

Emili: Umm, I can't think of any at the moment. But I'm sure I'll have some.

Interviewer: OK. Well, thank you for your interest in MI6. We'll be in touch. Thank you for coming. Do you know your way out?

Emili: Yes, don't worry, I'll find my way. Thank you for having me. I look forward to hearing from you.

Shakespearean Phrases (review)

A fool's paradise - living in the belief that things are going to get better is a fool's paradise: hope doesn't hide the truth that we're all doomed!

A foregone conclusion - His father is the boss and his mother bankrolls the company; I think we can say his promotion is a foregone conclusion.

All that glitters is not gold - Although my parents repeatedly told me that all that glitters is not gold, I still threw my money at every insane business opportunity I saw.
